HISTORY:

Long before Park City became a world class mountain resort and venue for the 2002 Olympic Winter Games, it was famous as a silver mining town and boasts a lively and colorful past. Park City was discovered in 1868 when soldiers stationed in Salt Lake City traversed the mountain from Big Cottonwood Canyon to find silver. The completion of the Transcontinental Railroad in 1870 brought hopeful miners by the droves to Utah with their eyes set on becoming rich overnight.

In 1884 Park City was incorporated and by 1889 the town's population was over 5,000. Modern conveniences like electricity and running water made Park City one of the most sought after mining towns in the West and by 1898 population in town reached 7,500, a number not far from today's current full-time residency.

By 1930, the idea of skiing had begun to catch on with the installment of a ski jump built on the Creole mine dump and interest in the trend of winter recreation continued to peak throughout the next few decades. By 1946 the first lift is installed at Snow Park (now Deer Valley). In 1981, Deer Valley Resort opened and the United States Film and Video Festival, highlighting independent films, opened in January. The festival has since become the legendary Sundance Film Festival.

Winter recreation continued to grow at an exponential rate, then In 1995 Salt Lake City was awarded the 2002 Winter Olympic Games. More than 40% of the events were held in Park City at the Utah Olympic Park, Deer Valley, and Park City Mountain Resort and the event brought international fame to Park City, whose population and development has continued to grow as a result.
